Four Cubans Arrested In Zellwood Indicted

By TODD PERSONS
Staff Writer

Four Cubans involved in the Zellwood bomb smuggling case were indicted on conspiracy charges Wednesday by a federal grand jury in Tampa.

The four were allowed to remain out of jail on $1,000 recognizance bonds pending their arraignment in federal district court here June 30.

THEY ARE Dr. Orlando Bosch Avila, head of the anti-Castro Revolutionary Recovery Insurrectional Movement (MIRR), and three of his followers, Marcos Ramos, Jose Moreijon and Gevelio Gutierrez, all of Miami.

The quartet plus two Americans, Frank Rafferty and William Johnson, also of Miami were arrested June 10 in Zellwood by U. S. customs agents who confiscated 18 aerial bombs plus other weapons and gasoline from a small house the men were using.

Cuban exile sources stated later that the bombs were to be loaded in a B-26 bomber and dropped on Cuban shipping.

THE INDICTMENT charges all four Cubans with conspiring to export munitions without a valid license. Gutierrez is also charged with possession of an automatic M-2 rifle.

The Americans were not indicted. Government attorneys said their cases were not considered.

Rafferty and Johnson both got out of jail on bond immediately after their arrest, but Bosch and his three companions remained in Orange County Jail for four days refusing food or drink.

BOSCH HAS claimed repeatedly he was "betrayed" by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) which he said condoned his actions.

In a Miami news conference earlier this week, Bosch produced equipment he said had been used to "bug" his MIRR offices there.

His attorney here, Ed Kirkland, said Thursday that Bosch informed him that "at least one member of a governmental agency had infiltrated the group prior to the arrests."

Kirkland said his clients were planning to make official protests to the State Department.

A FEDERAL court arraignment here last week for the four on direct government charges was postponed in favor of grand jury action when the Cubans appeared to be too weak from their hunger strike to comprehend the allegations against them. Bosch, said to be suffering from a stomach disorder, was rushed to Orange Memorial Hospital where he was treated for "simple malnutrition" and released. He and the others made bond and returned to Miami.
